“In hyperculture, the subject is constantly surrounded by an abundance of objects, spaces, events, media formats and services. They all sing out their promise of singularity, narrative, aesthetic or ludic qualities, as well as affective stimulation. The subject learns that this must be social normality: in this world, things only count if they appear interesting, valuable, singular, stimulating and authentic. It follows that the subject also expects this from other subjects – and of themselves.”

Andreas Reckwitz, Gesellschaft der Singularitäten, 2017

“Russia’s urban middle class has got used to a world of Ikea, iPhones, Visa credit cards and mini-breaks to Europe or the Gulf. That world is over.”

Financial Times, March 7th, 2022

Executive Audience Summary

Growing up as a western teenager in the 1990s, my friends and I were always scouting for new subcultures and communities. Safely sheltered in our prosperous middle-class world, we switched easily and fluidly between mountainbiking, grunge, techno parties, gaming, literature, art, travel and, of course, shopping.

Today, the quest for cultural distinction, community and self-actualisation is fully marketised and rapidly spreading from western countries to the global south. It's been digitally accelerated to lightning speed, almost like spot-trading. Hypercultural consumption and production are so tightly networked as to become indiscernible. While working on this show, I've eaten kimchi and giraffe, watched queer performances, received mRNA-injections, invested in organic olive plantations, while simultaneously also watching and uploading YouTube tutorials on percussion, dating, and self-management.

It all comes together in the so-called Collab Houses, where TikTok creators and influencers rent villas and curate their fictional luxury lives; notably the House of Hype in Los Angeles. Since brut is relocating to a new venue in St. Marx 2024, wouldn't this be a great opportunity to upgrade to a House of Hyperculture?

In this performance, we envisage brut as a Viennese base-camp for our hypercultural lives. A place and a non-place, permeating the barriers of time and space, identity and social class, performance and reality. A fiction big enough to contain a global middle-class of 3 billion people, even though the corridors might get just a little squeezed.

Interview mit Fabian Faltin & Adam Dekan

Fabian Faltin und Adam Dekan haben eine geführte Tour durch brut nordwest entworfen. Wie sie auf diese Idee gekommen sind, was euch bei dem Rundgang möglicherweise erwartet und was sie auf dem Gelände schon alles entdeckt haben, erzählen die Beiden in diesem Interview.

Wie kamt ihr auf die Idee, eine geführte Tour durch das Areal von brut nordwest zu entwickeln?

Zunächst wollten wir eine Geschichte erzählen, mit vielen Schauplätzen und Kapiteln wie ein Roman. Zusammen mit brut entstand dann die Idee, dass man dem roten Faden der Geschichte durchs ganze Haus folgt. Dadurch wird das Haus selbst zu einer Fiktion wie diese sogenannten „Collab Houses“, wo sich Tiktoker*innen und Influencer*innen in Villen einmieten und ein fiktives Luxusleben führen – etwa das „House of Hype“ in Los Angeles.

*Wie können die Teilnehmer*innen den Rundgang selbst kuratieren?*

Heute führen wir unser Leben nicht mehr nach einer fixen Schablone, wir kuratieren es dynamisch. Das fängt schon beim Mobiltelefon an: Der Screen zeigt dir immer ein genau auf dich zugeschnittenes Angebot, aus dem du auswählst. Du kuratierst deinen Job, deine Ernährung, deine Freizeit, deine Partner*innen, deine Spiritualität, deine Identität. Wir hoffen sehr, dass alle Teilnehmer*innen auch von unserem Rundgang etwas ganz Spezielles mitnehmen können, etwas, das genau zu ihrem Profil passt.

Habt ihr euch selbst schon auf dem Gelände verlaufen?

Ja, vergangenen Sommer gab es einen Workshop von zwei finnischen Performer*innen, Minja Mertenen und Esa Kirkkopelto. Da gingen wir in einer großen Gruppe auf den großen Parkplatz hinter dem brut nordwest und drehten uns so schnell, dass uns schwindlig wurde. Wir sahen Sterne und wurden selbst zu Kometen.

Dieser Ort wurde schon als Textilfabrik, Getränkehandel und nun als Theater genutzt, inwiefern wird diese vielseitige Geschichte in die Performance eingebunden?

Die Geschichte dieses Orts ist speziell, aber zugleich recht austauschbar: Mit der Post-Industrialisierung wurden überall Fabriken zugesperrt und als Theater, Museen und Kulturfabriken wiedereröffnet. In weiterer Folge entstehen dann oft hochwertige Wohnbezirke, wo eine gebildete, weltoffene und gutverdienende Mittelschicht einzieht. Das passiert gerade auch am ehemaligen Nordwestbahnhof. Unsere Performance ist Teil dieser Geschichte, aber wir wollen sie auch mit unseren eigenen Fiktionen und Utopien vermischen.

Was ist ein „House of Hyperculture“ für euch?

In der globalen Hyperkultur besteht unser aller Alltag vor allem aus Business und Performance. Das ist stressig. Das House of Hyperculture bietet eine persönliche Tankstelle für Reflexion, Gemeinschaft, Training und Authentizität. So wie früher in der Dorfkirche, wo man hinging zum Singen und Beten, zum Erzählen und Zuhören, zum Trauern und Feiern. Bevor man schließlich im Jenseits landete.
